BIOGRAPHY

Daniella Espinosa is an attorney with a practice focused on administrative law, public procurement, and infrastructure project structuring, with particular emphasis on Public-Private Partnerships (PPP) and mixed-investment schemes in Panama.

She has been involved in the legal and contractual structuring of infrastructure projects, including regulatory analysis, contract drafting and review, and support in tender processes and contractual design. Her experience includes preparing legal documentation, risk allocation matrices, and providing legal support during project development stages.

She currently serves as a Junior Associate at Alemán, Cordero, Galindo & Lee. Previously, she acted as an individual contractor under a United Nations Office for Project Services (UNOPS) project, providing technical-legal support to the Public-Private Partnerships Directorate. Her practice is distinguished by a structured, analytical approach focused on regulatory compliance and risk mitigation.

She is admitted to practice law in the Republic of Panama and is fluent in Spanish and English, with professional proficiency in Mandarin.
